Spotted Lanternfly

The invasive insect spotted lanternfly has been found in eastern Michigan. Early detection is critical to prevent it from spreading, and public reports are the number one way we learn about new detections of invasive species. If you think you have seen a spotted lanternfly, please go to Michigan.gov/SpottedLanternfly and submit your sighting. If possible, please include pictures in your report.

Impact
Spotted lanternfly is an invasive insect that threatens Michigan's grape crops, as well as many fruit crops and native trees. As it feeds, it creates a sugary residue called honeydew around the plant, which can lead to mold growth that damages the plant.

Identification
Spotted lanternfly changes in appearance throughout its life cycle. From July to December adults are active, with tan forewings adorned with black spots, and bright red hind wings. Adults lay egg masses that resemble concrete-colored smears until they hatch in April. From then until early July, they are small and black with white spots. From July to September they can be seen in their last juvenile stage, similar to the previous stages, but with much more red color. Spotted lanternfly loves tree of heaven (another invasive species), and will travel great distances to find it. If you're looking for SLE, the best place to start is a tree of heaven.

What We Are Doing
Spotted lanternfly is not here yet, but it has been moving closer. The SWxSW Corner CISMA has traps set around Berrien, Cass, and Van Buren Counties to keep a lookout for new populations popping up.

What You Can Do
Early detection remains our best tool against invasive species. If you think you have seen a spotted lanternfly, please go to Michigan.gov/SpottedLanternfly and submit your sighting. If possible, please include pictures in your report. If you are visiting areas that are known to have spotted lanternfly infestations, such as Oakland County in Michigan or most of Pennsylvania, getting a car wash on the way home can help to remove hitchhikers and egg masses, preventing them from reaching southwest Michigan.

Stay up-to-date with invasive species in Berrien, Cass, and Van Buren Counties!
